After the past two pandemic years, with their succession of hard and soft lockdowns, we are finally back and want to give you the best in-person experience with an HGGS Research Forum 2022, titled "Communication – Across disciplinary boundaries".

Communication is a field of studies in academia which examines the process of human communication, namely the creation and reception of both verbal and non-verbal messages, including also the visual representation of communication. At its core "communication" is found in all fields of humanities, social and behavioral sciences. The questions of communication affect politics, linguistics, rhetoric, media, history, health, homiletics, literature, dialectics, discourse, populism, journalism, popular culture, religiosity, gender issues and more. Research in the field of communication seeks to explore messages in various contexts; personal, interpersonal, social group, workplace, public, free speech, including also the use of information for democratization and dissemination of information.
